

Wave Clouds

These clouds are formed between two layers of air, with different densities, traveling at different speeds. Therefore, if warm, less dense layer exists over a layer of colder, denser air, and the wind shear across the two layers is strong enough, eddies will develop along the boundary.

