Dear Mr President:

I am concerned on this labor day about middle class workers. You campaigned on a platform of bringing back good middle class jobs. The economy has been slowly expanding since the collapse a decade ago, with productivity seeing significant gains, while middle class wages have been stagnant. The increases in corporate success has not helped their workers. You are in a position to help. You could create rules improving overtime pay and parental leave benefits. You could support job safety through government contracts rules. You could support workers in court cases such as the arbitration cases now before the supreme court. You could support workers who came here as children by backing DACA. You could appoint labor board members with a history of helping workers. So far you have not.

Please assure me that you will move to help middle class workers.

I am very proud to be a US citizen and a large part of that derives from our American dream.

Sincerely,
Eric Babson
